extent interrelated in terms of their effect on Chinese foreign and domestic policies.

6. (U) Of preeminent importance is the goal of Chinese national development or modernization. The leadership has targeted the year 2000 for China to attain the status of a "powerful, modern socialist country." In retrospect, initial production goals associated with the "Four Modernizations" were far too ambitious. Despite setbacks, however, the present leadership remains deeply committed to an innovative program of economic development. At the recently concluded 6th National People's Congress, Premier Zhao Ziyang reiterated the main tasks to be accomplished during the remainder of the decade:

- balanced development of agriculture and light and heavy industry;
- continued development of the energy and transportation sectors;
- technical upgrading of industrial enterprises; and,
- continued improvement in the national standard of living.

DISCUSSION

NATIONAL GOALS AND THREAT PERCEPTIONS

5. (U) The broad national goals of China--generally stated as modernization, reunification, and security--have remained fairly constant since 1978. While tactics for achieving them and the sense of urgency attached to each have varied, the goals themselves have not. All three are to a certain
